Eva Adel represents public and private employers in all areas of labor and employment litigation. She advocates for employers in a variety of matters, including wrongful termination, harassment, discrimination, and wage and hour violations, in the individual plaintiff and class action context.

Having prior experience representing plaintiff employees and defending employers in single-plaintiff, class, and PAGA representative actions in state and federal courts, clients rely on Eva to navigate the constantly shifting landscape of employment law in California and form creative solutions that align with each employer's unique business goals.

Prior to joining the firm, Eva participated in USC Gould Law School's Mediation Clinic where she personally mediated matters in small claims court, as well as unlawful detainer cases, EEOC cases, and contested adoptions in dependency court.
